

Audio Description with Closed Captions

[Audio Description at 0:00:00 – A white house]

[MUSIC PLAYING] We met in the city of Chicago at a house party, if you can believe that.

[Audio Description at 0:00:09 – PURE Insurance]

35 years. [LAUGHS] Seems like just yesterday.

[LAUHGTER]

I'm Diane Primo.

And I'm Quentin Primo.

I own a marketing firm.

I own a real estate investment firm.

Quentin is a want-to-be famous jazz musician.

There is no way I'm playing that piano on camera. Not a chance.

[Audio Description at 0:00:27 – He plays]

The home was built in the early 1900s. So it's architecturally significant. And so it's a wonderful home to entertain and big rooms and tall ceilings.

For most homes, I think the kitchen is the heart of the home.

[Audio Description at 0:00:37 – They kiss]

I tend to like to be close to the art. And the art that we collect primarily is by Black, or minority artist.

[Audio Description at 0:00:47 – A statue bust]

This piece right here, my son's friends, they all think that's me.

[Audio Description at 0:00: 53 – They pose with a painting]

The home has an incredible energy. So we were very disheartened when it almost burned down.

[Audio Description at 0:01:01 – Quinton sits on a lounge chair]

All my kids have great affinities for blankets. When we had the fire, there was a kid's blanket on the floor. Pure reclaimed the blanket, got it clean like that, right? It was given to my child who slept with that blanket for all of his life. And that was more important for me then what we needed.

[Audio Description at 0:01:25 – Diane enters]

This is probably my favorite collection. And these are referred to as Gullah Santas. They were in the spot where the heart of the fire was. And to Pure's credit, they actually dedicated a person to helping me reclaim and find the Christmas decorations.

Every individual involved without exception was compassionate, was qualified, and ultimately executed in a manner that--

Oh, yeah.

--produces what you see around us.

[Audio Description at 0:02:00 – Text: PURE Love Your Insurance]

[PIANO PLAYING]

[Audio Description at 0:01:03 – Quinton plays the piano before a sunlit window]

That's it. [LAUGHS]